

ROCKWELL

Taking inspiration from locality and heritage, we at Rockwell have explored beyond boundaries to express our identity through our cocktail making approach. Come and experience our understanding of colour, texture, aroma and taste.

Bringing a chef's approach to cocktail-making, We're looking to deconstruct, manipulate and transform simple, yet unique, ingredients to result in an array of drinks that are both alluring and fascinating in a way that expresses our identity.

Virginia Woolf was a central member of the Bloomsbury Group in London, Fitzrovia. In 1923, Woolf wrote 'In The Orchard', a short story of 3 parts, each beginning with 'Miranda slept in the orchard'.

Miranda draws inspiration from 'In the Orchard' combining freshly pressed Bramley apple juice along with the subtle notes of mint, sage and gentian from green Chartreuse; reminiscent of the wild herbs and flowers that may have strewn the grounds throughout the orchard.

The Four Vagabonds (1933-1953), released their hit song Rose Ann of Charing Cross. As most of the popular songs of WWII, it had nothing to do with war itself but rather about a wounded soldier who falls in love with a nurse while laid up at Charing Cross Hospital (which at the time was located on Strand).

Rose Ann takes inspiration from its namesake, bringing forth sweet subtle undertones of strawberries and berries through the infusion of berry leaf, alongside the addition of Belsazar Rosé departing notes of summer fruits and orange blossom and pink grapefruit.

From the late 1500's the grounds of Rockwell were a Spring Garden; home to an array of British wildflowers, young saplings and a place for local people to meet and take walks. The space was also thought to have been home to pheasants and wild fowl alongside orange trees and other exotic fruits.

Spring Gardens is a true marriage of flavours synonymous with those found within British gardens and countryside. Woody tones are present from the pea flower, while the port brings a freshness alongside sweet citrus and honey. In addition, Italicus gives subtle light and bitter notes rounded off with floral spices.

In addition to his love of cigars, Winston Churchill was well known for his imbibing of whisky with water. He learned this habit as a young man in India and South Africa, where the water being unfit to drink, one had to add whisky and, 'by dint of careful application I learned to like it'.

Winston is based on Johnnie Walker Black, a true love of Churchill (so much so that he actually painted a still life of the bottle). Rich and full notes of wood smoke and dry spice pair perfectly with the nutty vanilla flavour of tonka bean. During WWII there was a plan to assassinate Churchill using a bar of exploding chocolate, hence the addition of chocolate bitters rounding off this rich and complex libation. Subtle tones from the Crème de Banana are reminiscent of the tropical climate Winston would have encountered during his early travels.

Following his victory at the Battle of Trafalgar, Nelson's body was preserved in a cask of rum to allow transport back to England. Upon arrival, however, the story goes that cask was opened and found to be empty. It was discovered that the sailors had drilled a hole in the bottom of the cask and drunk all the rum, some say in the hope that they would imbibe some of this fighting spirit.

The Battle takes influence from this tale, with the merging of bright and grassy fresh grape of Torres brandy from Spain, along with the sweet, spicy and herbal Yellow Chartreuse from France. The cocktail is clarified, creating an aromatic and refined mixture resulting in a clear and perfectly balanced drink.

The practice of drinking tea during the Victorian era was interspersed with garden teas and promenades around the estates. However, it was Queen Victoria herself that really cemented Earl Grey as a popular choice, her favourite blend, brought to Britain from India via the East India Trading Company.

Victoria imparts soft floral notes through the infusion of earl grey tea, in perfect harmony with the bitterness and citrus brought through Mancino Rosso and Campari; a true Victorian-style negroni.

Christopher Columbus brought pineapples to the shores of Britain, giving royalty a taste for the exotic. In the 18th century, people could rent pineapples for the night if they were having a dinner party, using them as a centrepiece to demonstrate their wealth.

Centrepiece brings together an iconic combination of ingredients where the cleanness and sharpness of Tequila is broken down by the citrus of the lime and acid of the white port. Seaweed and oyster shell infused vermouth uses saltiness to highlight the individual layers of the drink, accompanied by a half shell of pineapple and tequila sorbet that compliments the experience.

Samuel Pepys was a diarist & secretary of the Admiralty during the late 1600's, famed for his penchant of indulging in chocolate as a form of cure for a hangover. Pepys resided at Twelve Buckingham Street, with a blue plaque commemorating his time there.

The blend of each spirit combined with the addition of cacao essence and cocoa butter wash, allow for a fusion of flavours, presenting rich, smooth chocolate in a glass (although we can't promise it will cure a hangover...)

An inn (old term for a present-day pub) stood on Bruton Place since 1423, back when Mayfair consisted of farmlands and open fields. Farm labourers and agricultural workers would have formed the main clientele and ale would have been the drink of choice.

Harking back to simpler times, The Guinea draws inspiration from ale houses of old with pairing of beer cordial and whisky. Palo santo adds uniquely complex caramel and vanilla notes while the palo santo smoke plays incredibly well alongside the oak and smoke finish of the whisky.

While England's national flower is well known as the Tudor Rose, London too has its own 'flower', Rosebay Willowherb; a tall plant with pretty pink flowers and leaves arranged in a spiral up its stem.

Rosebay takes inspiration from its name with the addition of rose syrup coupled with violet bitters resulting in a decidedly pink sip with delicious pink grapefruit tang.

Many of our native pollinators are under threat from habitat loss and lack of suitable flowers across the capital. Without intervention our bees are at risk, we must do everything we can in order to save these life-giving insects.

Mixed using Everleaf, a non-alcoholic aperitif made with botanicals sourced throughout London, alongside honey and camomile. The Bee Project helps us to close the cycle, from bee to glass to bee again, with a circular economy approach.

For every 'The Bee Project' sold £1 will be donated to charity, helping to protect our nation's bees.
